Since questions of sexual abuse emerged in the Church, and in other institutions, in the 1980s, some dioceses (including Chicago) have demonstrated leadership in dealing with the issue. After the “Spotlight” investigation by the Boston Globe, the U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops established a “zero tolerance” policy toward the commission and cover-up of abuse. This panel of Catholic scholars and professionals will review the Church’s attempt to face this issue and will consider why it has reemerged in 2018, relating that question to broader issues of clericalism and governance in the Catholic Church.

RUSSELL HITTINGER is the William K. Warren Professor of Catholic Studies and Research Professor of Law at the University of Tulsa. He is also a member of the Pontifical Academy of the Social Sciences and the Pontifical Academy of St. Thomas Aquinas. Hittinger is the author of many books, including the forthcoming Paper Wars: Catholic Social Doctrine and the Modern State.
